Pope's book explains in very nice details how the knowledge of Coptic and the existence of the so-called Rosetta Stone made the decipherment of Egyptian hieroglyphs possible. In a similar fashion, he talks about many other old scripts like Linear B, Cuneiform etc. In my opinion, the book has a few small flaws, though.

The Story of Decipherment This is an indispensable book about the history of decipherment. My favourite chapter is the one about Linear B, as the author deals with much depth about all the steps that led to the decipherment of that script (for which, by the way, no bilingual texts were available).

The Rosetta Stone, discovered in 1799 by members of Napoleon Bonaparte's campaign in Egypt, bore a parallel text in hieroglyphic, demotic and Greek. It was hoped that the Egyptian text could be deciphered through its Greek translation, especially in combination with the evidence from the Coptic language, the last stage of the Egyptian language.
